Their lives are turned upside down when one of them is killed. The remaining 4 return home vowing to do whatever they can to avenge his death and provide for his wife & kids. But like many returning soldiers they find themselves impotent in civilian life so they turn to what they know.

Using inside information, they devise a plan, a mission, to steal millions in Middle East gold that's being funnelled through a corrupt US bank. When the plan goes wrong, the troop find themselves in a gun battle with security and police and one of them, Michael is wounded and left behind. He finally makes his way to the rendezvous only to find himself alone and the bonds of a lifetime are torn apart – he's devastated. He embarks on an urban odyssey to discover the truth but can he find it before the police and the mob find him.

Present day, a 1970's Caprice idles outside the Williams Bros. Merchant bank in Manhattan. The driver, wearing a G.W Bush Halloween mask, impatiently waits. Two masked gunmen exit the bank, struggling to run under the heavy weight they are carrying. The security guard runs after them. One of the men shoots the guard while the other flees toward the car. Suddenly, two uniformed police officers appear, a fierce gun battle erupts. As one man enters the car, the other is shot and hits the ground. He watches his partners drive off, leaving him alone and injured.

Three months earlier, Michael, Tony, Jessie and Vincent are having dinner with Cassie, the widow of their childhood friend Phil. After 9/11 this group of 5 friends signed up for the marine reserves, never imagining that soon they would find themselves deployed to Iraq where Phil would lose his life. Now, years later, Cassie's house is worth pennies on the dollar and she and her children face bankruptcy. The four lifelong friends vow to avenge Phil's death and like modern day Robin Hoods, devise a plan to steal millions in illegal gold being funneled through a corrupt US bank.
